In Remembrance

Forever in our hearts. Never forgotten.

4 New Year's Resolutions for Grievers

For many of us, the new year means a fresh start. It's an opportunity to let go of the past and look forward to the future.

However, welcoming the new year can be a difficult experience for those who have recently lost a loved one. And while it may be easy to close yourself off from others, it's important to seek comfort in those closest to you.

Below, we outline a number of New Year's resolutions for grievers on their journey to healing.

1. Be Open to Happiness

Attempting to face joy after the death of a loved one is complicated. While one day you may feel happy, other days you may feel sad. Remember, no two people grieve the same, so no matter how long it's been since your loss, you may still feel emotional moving into a new year.

As the new year rolls in, allow yourself to embrace the stages of grief as they come rather than avoiding them. Gently pay attention to your feelings, and find ways to share your thoughts with friends and family. If a loved one of yours had a personal connection to the deceased, they too may be experiencing similar grief.

Rely on one another for support. With time, feelings of depression, anger, guilt, regret and loneliness will fade.

2. Plan Opportunities for Remembrance

Make it a resolution this year to make time to remember your loved one.

A great way to remember your loved one is by finding opportunities to honor them. Is there something they particularly loved to do? Perhaps there's a charity they volunteered at, or a family tradition that makes you think of him or her.

You can look back on all the fond memories you have with your loved one, and honor their legacy for many years to come. After all, the best way to honor your loved one is to live your life to the fullest.

3. Try a New Activity

While it may be intimidating at first, trying new things can open your eyes to unexplored passions and possibilities. Plus, picking up a new hobby in the new year may help you focus less on your grief and more on your newfound interest.

As you work through your grief, consider the following activities to reduce feelings of stress and anxiety:

- Take a cooking class.
- Knit a scarf.
- Join the local yoga
- Garden (indoors or outdoors).
- Learn a musical instrument.
- Read a book.
- Journal your thoughts and feelings.
- Volunteer at the local soup kitchen.
- Complete a puzzle.

These activities not only assist in coping with grief, but also promote self-awareness, reflection and relaxation.

4. Take Time for Yourself

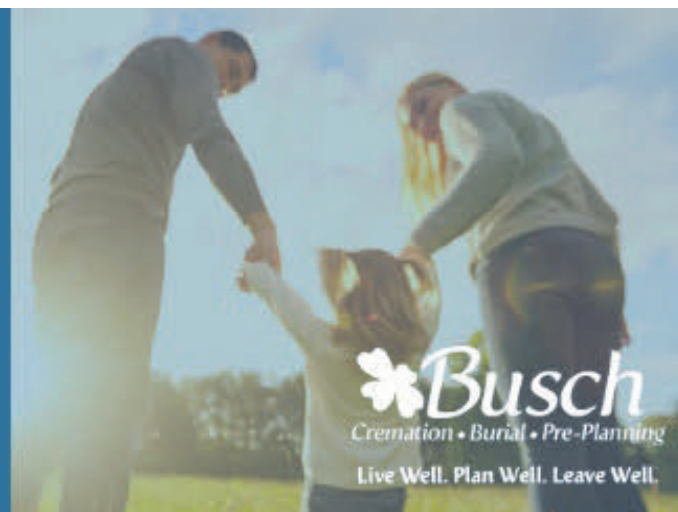

In the months following the loss of a loved one, it's important to remember the grieving process has no set timeline. The stages of grief are natural and often unpredictable, which is why it's important to do what feels best to you.

Take time to rest and prioritize your needs. Practice self-care by drinking plenty of water, eating balanced meals, exercising and socializing with friends and family. As you set out to write your New Year's resolutions, use this list as a guide in your journey towards healing.

Damien Forshe, urban farming pioneer, dies at 50

Damien Forshe, of Pepper Pike, did what many people believed was impossible — he brought life to a blighted area of Cleveland and inspired others to do the same. Forshe, the co-founder of the Rid-All Green Partnership in Kinsman, died at Hillcrest Hospital Nov. 29 after a heart attack. He was 50.

Since 2011, Forshe had operated the urban farming operation on 26 acres of “The Forgotten Triangle,” mostly vacant tax delinquent properties between E. 79th and E. 84th streets off Kinsman Avenue and turned it into an urban farm that produces thousands of pounds of fresh produce every year using employees and volunteers. The operation also includes a tilapia fish farm and serves as a training center for people who want to create their own gardens.

His widow, Taran Henderson-Forshe, said he also ran a composting facility at the site and was a general contractor who built gardening structures and “hoop houses,” a type of greenhouse, for homes, schools and charitable organizations.

“Rid-All was a place where people would come to learn about hands-on urban farming,” Henderson-Forshe said. “He employed about 7 to 10 people and had dozens of volunteers from area schools who helped out while learning about farming.”

She said the vegetables and fish are sold to local restaurants and food distributors. The company also sells locally made enriched soil under the name Black Gold.

THE PLAIN DEALER

Damien Forshe, co-founder of an urban farm in the Kinsman neighborhood, pictured in one of the six greenhouses in 2012, died Nov. 29 after a heart attack.

He had a “vision to rejuvenate Cleveland through urban agriculture that guided him to create a consortium of organizations and individuals that had the experience needed to take on such a difficult task,” said a statement from the family. “As he developed the Greater Cleveland community around his concepts for greenhouses, fish and soil farms, Forshe and his team also created partnerships worldwide, expanding his work to places such as Belize, Kenya, Ghana, and Israel. Damien and his team often advised universities — teaching his innovative approach to urban farming and agricultural business. But the greatest gift Damien Forshe gave to Cleveland, Ohio, was his love.”

The name of the company was derived from Forshe’s Rid-All Green Partnership Exterminating Corp., which he started in the mid-1990s, and is still in operation.

Forshe was initially aided in his agricultural operation by Will Allen, head of Growing Power Inc., and an urban farmer recognized by Time magazine in 2010 as one of the 100 most influential people in the world.

Forshe was also involved in programs to stem urban violence. After 12-year-old Tamir Rice was shot and killed by police while wielding a realistic-looking toy gun, Forshe organized a “Toy Gun Buyback” program in the city to lessen the chances of such an event happening again.

A play called “Brink City” was performed at Karamu House. It was based on a series of comic books written by Forshe that taught children about sustainability and environmental issues.

Surviving with his wife are his mother, Bessie Forshe, of Elberton, Georgia; a son, Christian Henderson, of Shaker Heights; daughters Daisha Henderson and Hunter Henderson, both of Pepper Pike; three grandchildren; two sisters and three brothers. Services will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Calhoun Funeral Home, 23000 Rockside Road, Bedford Heights.

Don Webster, popular TV-5 personality dies at 79

tferan@plaind.com

Don Webster, who became one of the most popular personalities in Cleveland television history during 35 years at WEWS Channel 5, died Thursday at his home in Westlake. He was 79.

The unexpected death was announced by WEWS, but the cause was not immediately available.

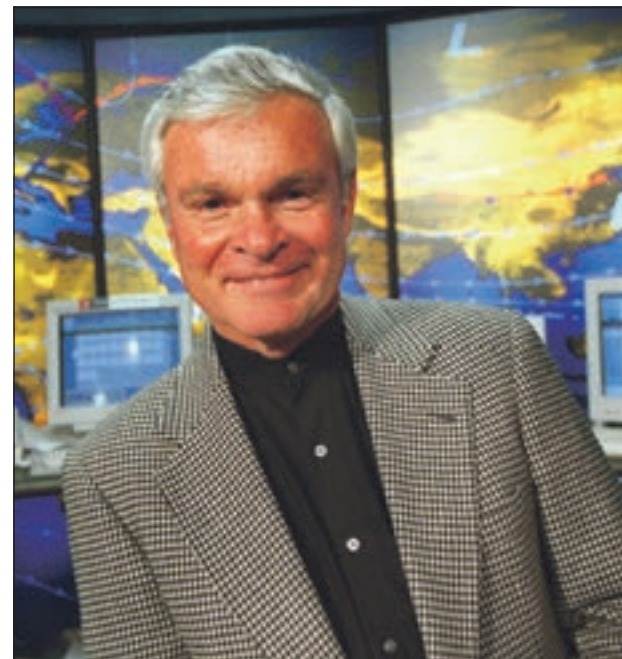

Webster retired from the station 19 years ago this week, but he remained an on-air presence doing commercials and through a tour business with his wife, Kandi. The couple had returned to Cleveland after retiring to Hilton Head, South Carolina.

“He was one of the most humble and interesting people I’ve ever met in the business,” said Channel 5 General Manager Steve Weinstein, “It’s a sad day at Channel 5 and in Cleveland.”

Webster’s career was unsurpassed in its variety. Hired away from a TV job in his native Hamilton, Ontario, he arrived at TV-5 in September 1964 to host an “American Bandstand”-type series called “The Big Five Show” and a game show called “Quick as a Wink.”

The latter lasted only 13 weeks in a ratings battle against “The Mike Douglas Show.” But “Big Five,” at 5 p.m. Saturdays, was such a hit that it was renamed “Upbeat” and nationally syndicated to 90 cities, including New York, Los Angeles and Chicago. It lasted until 1971.

Webster meantime added other duties, including booth announcing and delivering weather and sports. He hosted “It’s Academic” (now known as “Academic Challenge”), nine years of live Ohio Lottery shows and even the final days of “The Gene Carroll Show,” after the deaths of Carroll and two replacements on the local amateur hour.

He had a brief stint co-hosting “The Morning Exchange” before starting “Afternoon Exchange” with Wilma Smith in January 1978.

He served as assistant to the general manager and then station manager 1983-89. “Management was probably the low point,” he recalled in 1999. “It started out well, but I ended up being a bean counter and bookkeeper more than a television person. That just didn’t sit well.”

He returned to the air in 1989 as the lead weather forecaster for “Newschannel 5,” and said he “enjoyed it more than I ever did before because I realized it was what I should be doing.”

He said he left it when he was only 60 because his father had died at 34, when Don was 11, from a previously undetected congenital heart problem.

“The reality is, you never know how much time you’ve got,” Webster said. “When people ask me why are you [retiring], I think the answer is, I know I’m on the back nine, but I don’t know what hole I’m on. That about sums it up — you’ve got to get out and do what you enjoy when you can.”

Information on survivors in addition to his wife and on services was not yet available.

Cleveland rock legend Glenn Schwartz dies at 78

Jimi Hendrix loved his playing so much that he asked him to perform at his birthday party. Jimmy Page, Eric Clapton, Janis Joplin and Frank Zappa were among his biggest admirers. He got his start in the James Gang and spent decades jamming alongside rock 'n' roll royalty.

But there was only king — God almighty — to Glenn Schwartz. And the Cleveland rock legend saw his guitar as much as an instrument of faith as a maker of music.

He often sang about heaven, the daily struggles on earth and the road to eternal salvation.

Schwartz is on his way: The beloved musician, who inspired generations of players and fans around the world over five-plus decades, died on Friday, Nov. 2, 2018. He was 78.

"I'm in denial," said his longtime companion, Sally Moncol. "I was talking with Glenn on the phone in the morning and then he told me, 'I'm out of breath and feel like I just ran a mile.' Then he started slurring his words."

Schwartz lived in Euclid with his brother and bass-playing bandmate, Gene Schwartz — who tried to help before calling 911.

"Gene called emergency and they came and took Glenn to Cleveland Clinic Euclid Hospital," says Mangol. "He passed away soon after getting there. He had so many ups and downs in life, but it's shocking to think he's gone."

Schwartz enjoyed many peaks and survived even more struggles in his life. As a juvenile, he loved hot rods, street racing and getting into trouble.

Cleveland rock legend and internationally-acclaimed musician Glenn Schwartz performs in 1967 at the La Cave on Euclid Avenue.

He also loved rock 'n' roll and learned gritty riffs playing along to 45s by bluesmen like Otis Rush. Schwartz could play cool, loose and bluesy. Or he could flip a switch and play tough — with the mania and a wicked vibrato that brought flair and intensity to the room. He was an emotional player, and his guitar was his emotional divining rod.

After getting out of the military in 1967, Schwartz embarked on a life of rock 'n' roll.

"I was trying to put the James Gang together and was having problems finding a guitar player," said James Gang drummer and founder Jimmy Fox. "So I was asked to audition for this nine-piece band. I wasn't going to do it until I heard that Glenn was supposed to be there — he already had a reputation for being an amazing guitar player and I wanted to meet him."

Fox was blown away by Schwartz soon after hearing him play.

"He had been stationed in Germany for three years and had so many different influences and was nothing like the other musicians in the area," says Fox. "He was on par with the greatest guitar players in rock 'n' roll."

Schwartz, who was often called "The White Jimi Hendrix," played in the James Gang for less than a year before moving to Los Angeles. He was replaced by his friend Joe Walsh. They remained close throughout.

By the end of 1967, Schwartz had co-founded the L.A.-based Pacific Gas & Electric — which scored a Top 20 hit, "Are You Ready," in 1970. After some heady living in the hippie scene on the Sunset Strip, he quit the band and took a very different direction.

"People were doing a lot of drugs out there and Glenn was an acid casualty," says Moncol, who had attended some of the James Gang's earliest shows at places like the old Mentor Hullabaloo. "So he quit the scene and turned to religion."

Schwartz often confessed from the stage — in bars such as Hoopples and the Beachland Ballroom, where he performed regularly — about the dark period in his life that led to a conversion to Christianity. Rather than introduce songs or do shout-outs to the bartenders, he would lament his days "backsliding" and doing drugs, stealing cars, "lying and cheating." And he would punctuate every story with a warning about the powers of Satan.

Upon returning from California to Ohio in 1970, Schwartz found himself possessed by a cult. He spent seven years in the 1970s in the Church of the Risen Christ — an Orrville-based religious group led by a charismatic fire-and-brimstone preacher, Larry Hill, who got his start trying to save street people, gang members and drug addicts.

The community numbered around 25. Members, including Schwartz, lived on a farm and were at the command and whims of Hill. They would wake up at 4 a.m. to work in the field for meager rations of food.

Schwartz's guitar wizardry was a gift to the church. He was a featured member of its All Saved Freak Band, considered one of America's first Christian rock groups. The band performed regularly in Kent and recorded albums that mixed blues, psychedelia and folk rock and fetch upwards of $150 on the collector market.

"The cult was built on terror and control and one day he finally decided he had to leave," said Moncol. "He just walked out and hitchhiked his way back to Cleveland."

All Saved Freak Band shows would feature Hill delivering fiery sermons about the treachery of the devil and the glory of salvation — themes that Schwartz later brought to his live shows in Cleveland.

"There were times when Glenn would say things about women or tell people in the audience that were going to hell," says Cindy Barber, co-owner of the Beachland Ballroom. "He had gotten sucked into that cult and was beaten there, but Glenn really just wanted to play music and save souls."

"He had this sign full of biblical phrases and wore a work shirt with biblical phrases," says Barber. "We became dear friends — he was a kind and gentle man."

Regular gigs attracted blues fans and bar hounds, along with curiosity-seekers interested in hearing him preach from the stage and confront the audience.

"It wasn't an act — he would try to save souls no matter if he was playing a club or we were going shopping in a Giant Eagle," said Moncol. "I know some people mocked him, but he never backed down. Glenn was a caring soul with a strong conviction."

One of the admiring regulars at his shows was Black Keys guitarist Dan Auerbach. In 2016, he brought Schwartz and Walsh to Nashville to record in his studio with his band The Arcs.

"One of my fondest memories is of him and his replacement in the James Gang, Joe Walsh, sitting closely, face to face, in an empty studio, delightedly trading fiery amazing licks back and forth with deep determination and great joy," said Cleveland musician and arts activist Nick Amster, who attended the recording session. (Schwartz played his final show ever at a birthday party for Amster at the Beachland Ballroom on Sept. 30.)

That same year, Schwartz and Walsh joined Auerbach on stage to jam together at the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival in Indio, California.

"Glenn remained close friends with Joe Walsh," said Bob Eville, a longtime friend who booked shows and assisted Schwartz. "Joe would make a point to see Glenn every time he came to Cleveland and would come down to Hoopples to jam with him."

Eville met Schwartz 55 years ago when he was hanging out in the drag-racing scene with Gene Schwartz, a noted racer. Their relationship expanded, with Eville helping Glenn Schwartz on a day-to-day basis.

"Glenn was very religious and didn't appreciate what was going on in society," says Eville. "So I tried to soften things a bit between him and the world because I didn't want to see him miss out on some of the opportunities he had because of his great talents."

In time, Schwartz increasingly came to see those talents in a different light.

"He would often tell me, 'I don't care about playing — it's all about witnessing,'" said Moncol. "He played his guitar in service to God."

In recent years, Schwartz became less fiery with the between-song banter. It reflected a more contemplative, philosophical side as he dealt with health issues.

Schwartz is survived by his sons, Robert and Glenn Jr., and his brother Gene. Funeral arrangements are being handled by Brickman Bros. Funeral Home in Willoughby.
